This situation is caused by a connection or other damage in the internal electronics of the display. If you notice that a portion of a pixel is not illuminated, that means that this is probably a dead pixel. How to fix a dead pixel How to fix a dead pixel is an issue that every flat-panel display owner should know. Dead pixels can occur at random throughout the screen or be concentrated in one area of the display. The most common causes of dead pixels include poor quality materials, imperfect manufacturing, improper setup or installation, dust accumulation, poor ventilation, and improper use. For most dead pixel problems, no additional action is needed. However, in some cases, it can be necessary to replace or repair your display. How to Clean a Dead Pixel One of the first things you need to do when cleaning a dead pixel is to identify what it is. Most dead pixels can be cleaned with a special cleaning solution which can be found at your local hardware or electronics store. Before using a cleaning solution, it is best to thoroughly clean the surface of your display with a soft cloth or the proper cleaning solution. This will remove any dust particles or debris that may have collected on the surface of the display. If the dead pixel is in a common area of the screen, it will probably require multiple passes through the cleaning solution. If the dead pixel is not in a common area, one pass may be sufficient. Dead Pixel Cleaning Solution Most electronics and computer stores carry a cleaning solution that is suitable for dead pixel cleaning. The cleaning solution is designed to remove any contamination that may be present on
