Sunshine came from a solid mix of technical chops and solid execution. The brand was nimble, it was fast. I remember when they got their first desktop, when they came for AOL, and they had a Mac. There were many versions of Macintosh, but the PC version of Macromedia Flash was the most successful, but Macintosh, it felt like easy money. Among competitors, Photoshop is definitely superior in features, since early on it came with a host of bundled features, the only others being Macromedia Fireworks, Corel Draw, and Alias Creo. By the mid-2000s, Adobe not only had GIMP but was also acquiring many of the smaller, niche image editing packages, like Pixel Magic and Pixel Edit, giving them greater support. When you have the power to learn the system, then the system is for learning. So the system for learning is to have a curriculum that matches the technology and the applications to use to master the technology. The power of the system for learning is to give us a broad exposure to the technology. To students who get a new camera, they may not have the feeling of the equipment's characteristics and how to use it in the first few days. This is a gap in our learning process. In a similar way, until a person enters into the high-level design profession, even if he or she has extensive knowledge of the tools and techniques for each medium, the design process will be new even for some people who are working for the first time. The productivity rates of a designer are not directly connected to how many hours of working he or she can get in a day. And using a graphics tablet can save time for those who cannot take good photos with a mobile device because of the proximity to the screen of the tablet itself. It's a time-saver.
